Rachel Hanover had known even from the age of sixteen how to use her body to bring pleasure to any man whom she chose to bed, and those attributes she would continue to use for the rest of her life. A 17th century love triangle caused by a desire for revenge. Set during the English Civil War Rachel develops an unhealthy determination to seek revenge for the Royalist execution of her father against a background of two families destroyed by war. The Richmonds who support Parliament and the Suttons who support the Royalists with the marriage between their two eldest children being cancelled. Sarah Richmond moves to London leaving her half-sister Susanna at their country home where she continues with her marriage-destroying affair with her lover. In Oxford James Sutton falls in love with Rachel but she only wants him for his royalist connections which will suit her desire for revenge. She and her accomplice set out on a road of conspiracy and murder to help Parliament's cause including the murder of James father without knowing his identity....
