Excerpt from Development Concept Plan Environmental Assessment: Signal Mountain, Grand Teton National Park, Wyoming, October 1988 Grand Teton National Park, centrally located between two national forests and south of Yellowstone National Park, draws over two million visitors each year (see Rocky Mountain Region Map). The majority of these visitors arrive in the summer and early fall months to View wildlife, and geologic features and to experience the outdoors. National Park Service (nps) and concession facilities allow the visitor to do this in a variety of ways ranging from the very primitive to the plush. Signal Mountain Developed Area is centrally located within the park, on the east shore of Jackson Lake to the south of the Snake River outlet. It lies on a steep west-facing slope at the foot of Signal Mountain (see Location Map Signal Mountain). Signal Mountain Developed Area has been the location of a tourist facility on the shore of Jackson Lake since the late 1920 s. Today some of the facilities which constitute the Signal Mountain Developed Area are operated by the National Park Service while the remainder are operated under a concession contract.
