You will meet with plain honelt People, who afa fect neither Gaudinefs in their Drefs, nor great Refinement in their Manners home-fpun Folks, who fpeak as they think, and appear What they Fine Fields you will fee indeed, enjoy frefh Air and agreeable Walks, and be entertained with Nas ture in her genuine Drefs; but, adieu to Balls, to Affemblies, to Plays, and all the Gaiety that at tends them. O, Sir, faid the young Lady, you: cannot think that this will be fuch a mighty Difa appointment to me. I went fometimes to thofe Diverfions It Is true, but without being at all in love with them 5 I found little other pleafure at an Afiembly, than what the Company of a fewfriends gave me. And Iconfefs, that the chief Entertain? ment I received at a Play, was the Reprefentations I there met with of Life, and the Leffons I drew from the Virtues or Follies of others. If, as you tell me, I...
